A Growing Medium and an Expanding Community

Podcasting has gone from fringe media to part of our worldwide conversation. Its growth around the world, and especially in Germany and Berlin has been prodigious. Lockdowns and quarantines didn't deter podcasters and the global audience expanded significantly throughout the pandemic. PodFest Berlin was able to tap into local enthusiasm as well as find support from partners and sponsors like: Shure, SAE Berlin, Costa Coffee and Focusrite.

PodFest Berlin is the city's first homegrown podcasting festival. Founder Daniel Stern says that "Berlin is home to more podcasts than ever, but the people making them seldom cross paths. Podcasting is often done in relative isolation; I wanted to gather everyone under one roof and celebrate all that we have achieved."

Live and In Person

Podcasting is a medium made and consumed in isolation, yet creates a sense of intimacy between loyal listeners and dedicated creators. PodFest Berlin's live recordings change that ironic dynamic. It is an exciting opportunity for Berlin audiences and podcasters to connect in person.

"We're a community who wants to connect, amplify each other and find ways to collaborate." Says Daniel Stern, "I also started PodFest Berlin in order for podcast fans and creators to be in the same place at the same time. It's wonderful and rare for most podcast hosts to see the appreciation of their audiences in person"

PodFest Berlin was founded in 2021. The three day event was a resounding success and the decision to continue into 2022 was made before the weekend's final curtains. The first PodFest Berlin set a table for Berlin's diverse podcast community and in its second year is adding more seats around that table. The festival expects to grow in size from 500 to 2000 attendees and triple the represented languages from four in 2021 to twelve in 2022.
